Traditional Scottish Food & Drink

Some popular dishes which you may or may not like...

Oatcakes or 'bannocks' are a type of biscuit, often served with cheese.
Porridge is simply boiled oatmeal with milk (and salt) which is often had for breakfast.
Colcannon is a vegetable mix made from cabbage, carrots, turnip and potatoes.
Stoved tatties are a mix of potato, onion and leftover meat or vegetables.

For the more daring of eaters, there is Haggis, which is made from the insides of sheep mixed with oatmeal and cooked in a sheep's stomach. Why not give it a try?

The Scots call their Scotch Whiskey, 'water of life' and it is quite distinct in taste as it is made of barley and peat water. Scotch whisky must be distilled in a specific way according to law and has grown popular all over the world. A good Scotch single malt whisky can be very expensive. Another popular drink is what you would expect - TEA!

The Palace of Holyrood House

There is a legend which says King David I was hunting in 1128 when his horse was frightened by a stag (male deer) and King David fell off his horse. The story is that when he fell, he grabbed the antlers of the stag and the horns turned into the shape of a Crucifix. The King promised to build an Abbey to give thanks to the cross. Holyrood means 'Holy Cross'. This Palace is often used as a Royal Residence in May and July by Queen Elizabeth II. Mary Queen of Scots also stayed here.
